We're off to the party, Cinderella," said Anastasia.
"See that you do the laundry while we're gone," added Drizella. "We'll need clean clothes for tomorrow."

Cinderella began sorting the laundry in Anastasia's bedroom. "I wish I could go to the party," she said wistfully. "It must be such fun to get dressed up in pretty things—like this lovely skirt."

“But, of course, a pretty skirt looks best with a pretty blouse,” Cinderella said. “Hmm—I think this one will do.”

Cinderella looked at herself in the mirror.
“I don’t think this outfit is complete yet,” she said.
“Perhaps a belt would add just the right touch.”

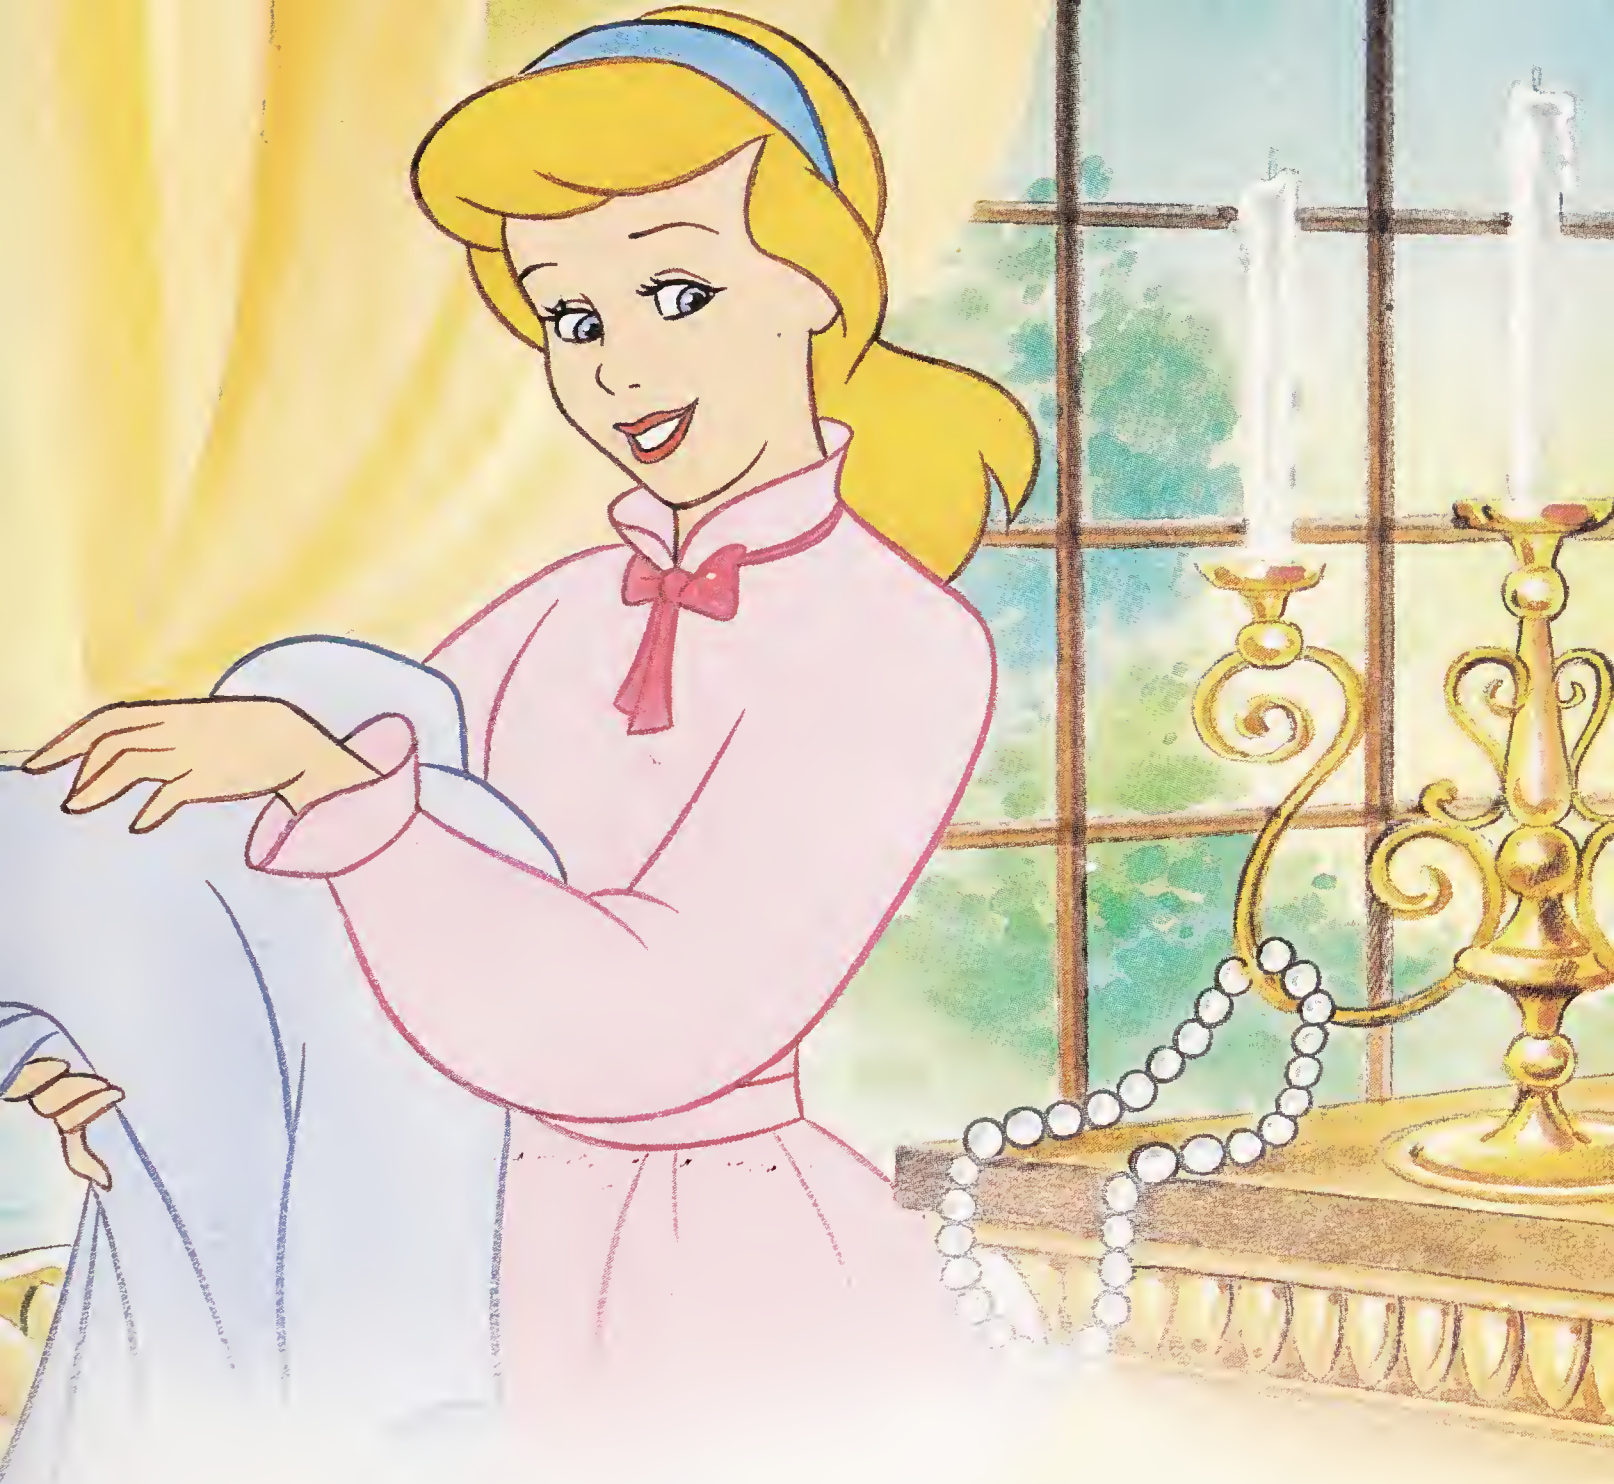

Cinderella moved on to Drizella's room.
"Here's something else my party outfit needs,"
she said. "A pretty ribbon for my hair."

“Oh, that necklace would look wonderful with these clothes,” Cinderella cried, spotting a string of beads.

“Well, here’s something my outfit doesn’t need,” Cinderella said, laughing, as she picked up a pair of pajama pants. “I think I would look quite silly wearing these with my party skirt!”

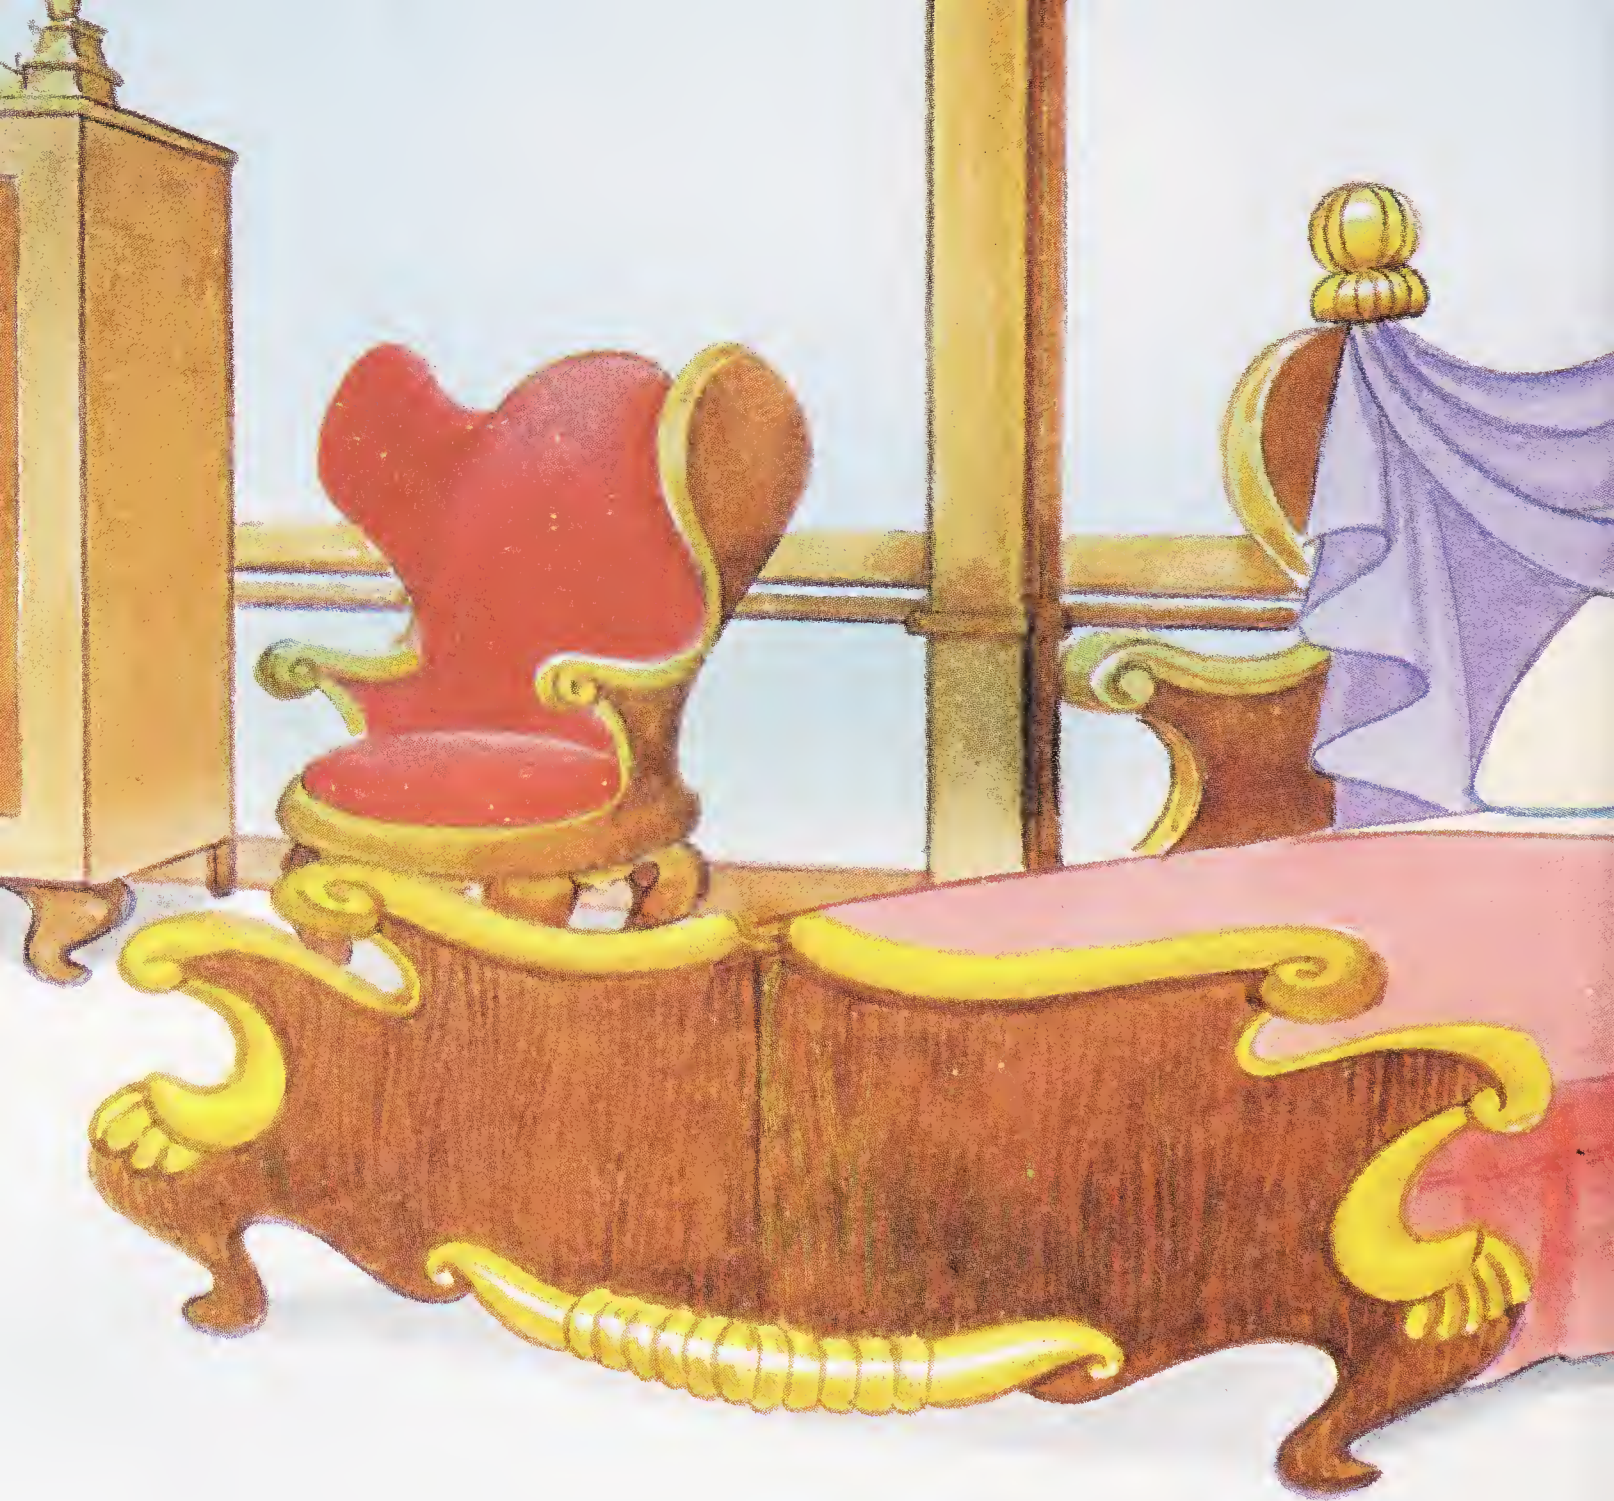

“I’m glad my stepmother’s room isn’t very messy,” Cinderella said with a smile. “It makes it much easier to find something pretty to add to my outfit,” she giggled. She spied something on the floor. “Ooh—what a marvelous hat!” she exclaimed.

"I'm almost ready for a party now," Cinderella said. "But here's something that would make my beautiful outfit look even better—a silky scarf."

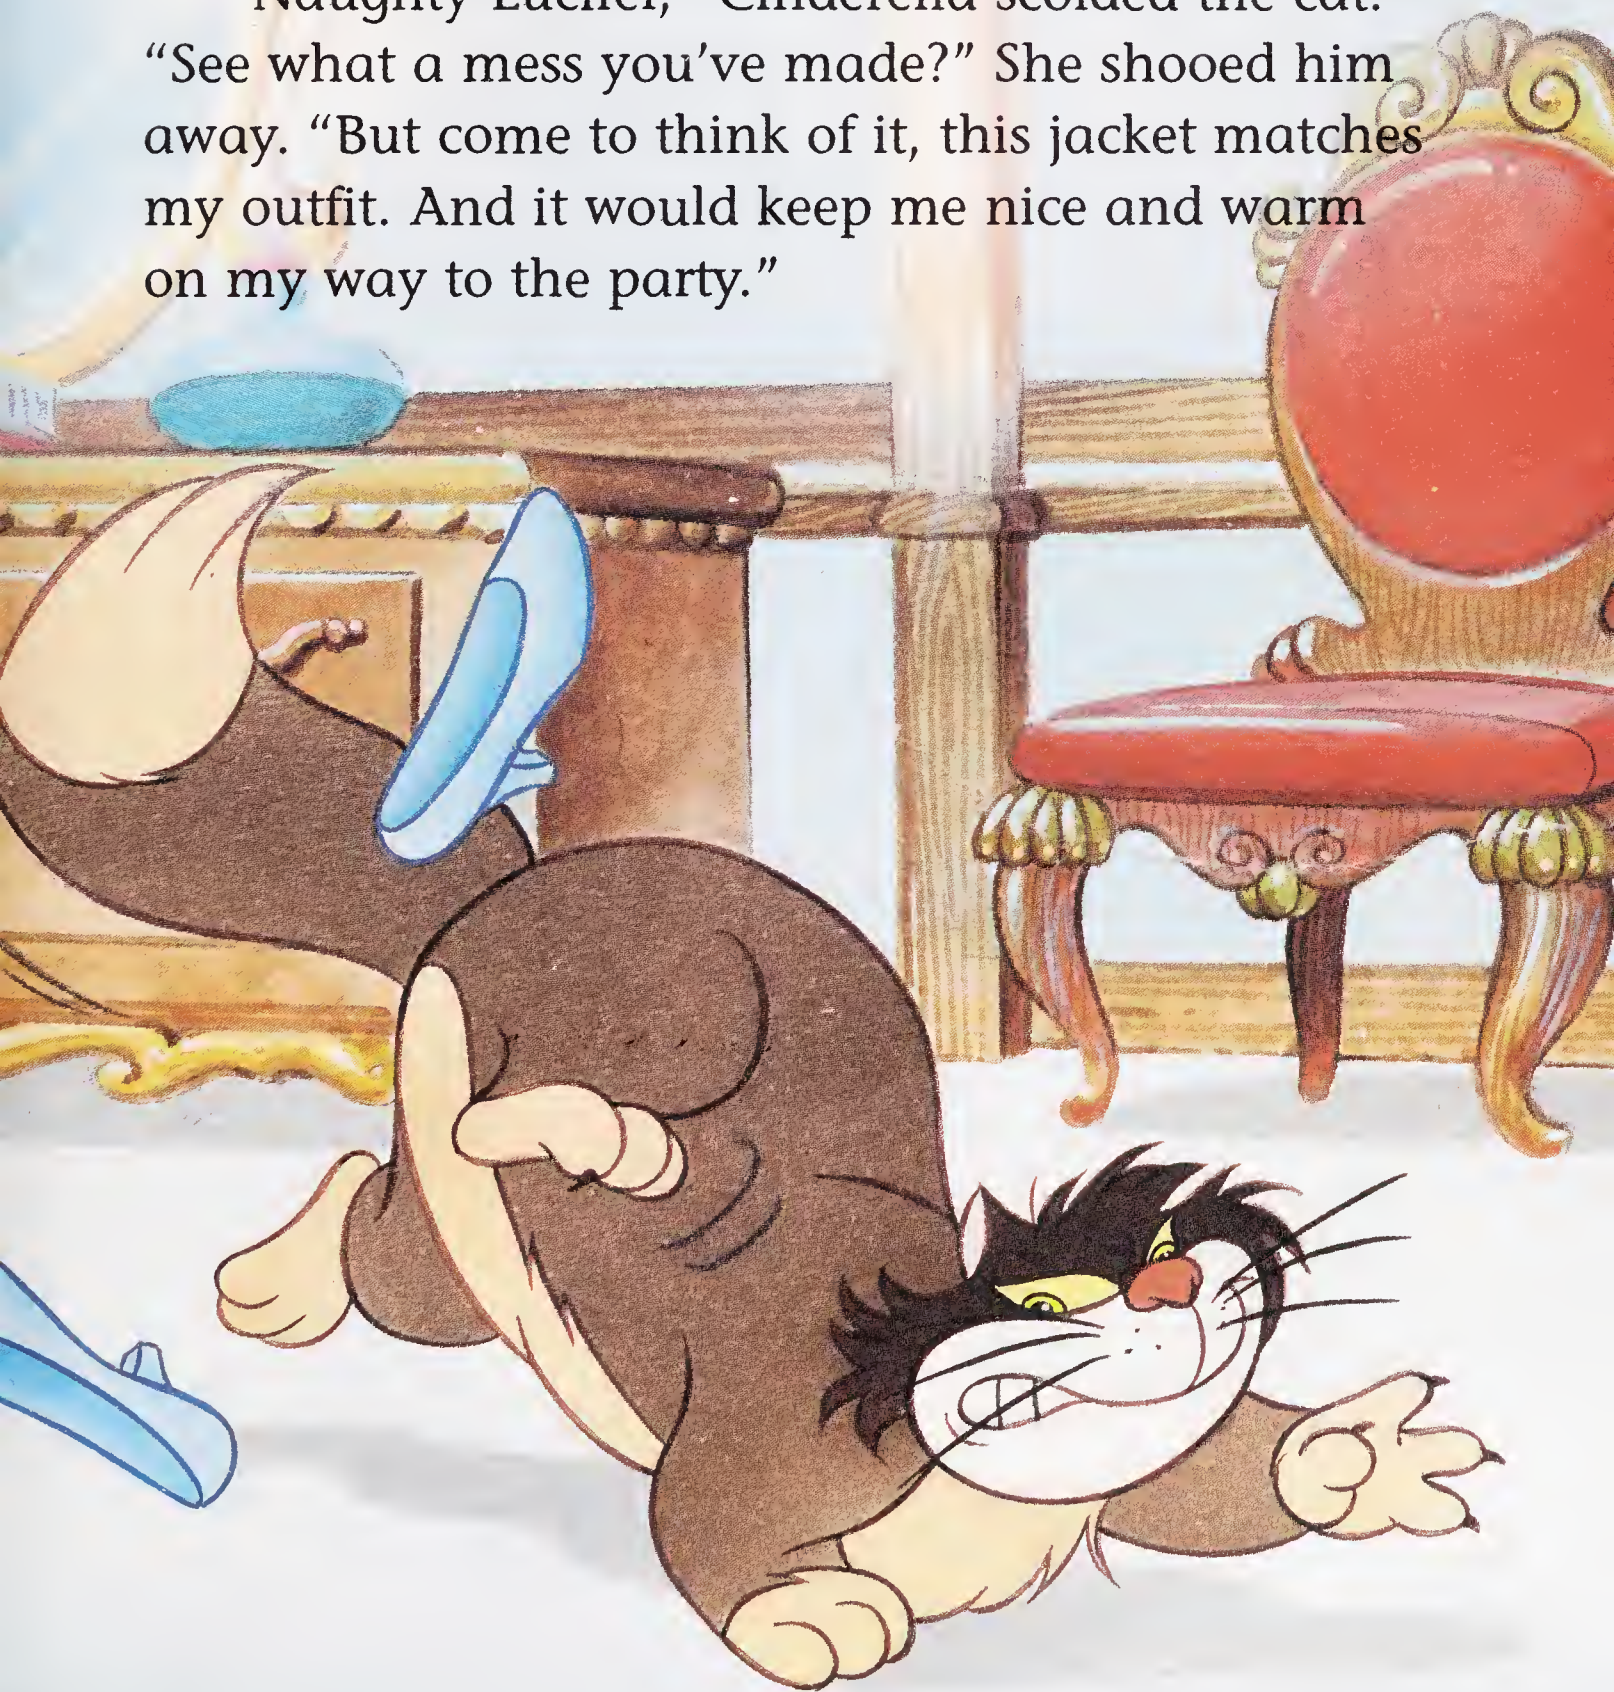

“Naughty Lucifer,” Cinderella scolded the cat. “See what a mess you’ve made?” She shooed him away. “But come to think of it, this jacket matches my outfit. And it would keep me nice and warm on my way to the party.”

Cinderella was just beginning to think that all she needed was a pair of dancing slippers to complete her outfit, when suddenly she heard her stepmother and stepsisters returning. “Oh, dear,” she cried. “I’d better change out of these clothes.”

Cinderella looked at her outfit in the mirror one last time. "It's too bad I couldn't find a pair of dancing slippers," she said with a sigh. "But perhaps someday my dream will come true!"
